Elizabeth Warby

and James Layton and James Kiernan

John and Sarah Warby's eldest daughter, Elizabeth was born on 30th September, 1802 at Prospect and she was baptised on 23rd December, 1804 at St. John's, Anglican Church, Parramatta.

When she was about twelve her father employed a tall, sandy haired young man named James Layton who arrived in the colony aboard the Marquis of Wellington on 27th January, 1815 with a seven year sentence which had been handed down at Middlesex.¹ In 1818 James petitioned Governor Macquarie for a ticket of leave. His referee was John Warby who had found James to be a steady and industrious man during the three year period in which he had employed him.²

Elizabeth Kiernan, formerly Layton, nee Warby

The young couple's relationship grew and they were married on 8th February, 1820 at St. Philip's, Anglican Church, Sydney. It would seem strange that their marriage did not take place nearer to Campbelltown. Perhaps James, with his origins as a coachman in the city of Birmingham, had tired of country life and having obtained his ticket of leave, gained employment in a printing establishment in Sydney. Their marriage certificate describes him as a printer and their daughter's death certificate describes him as a compositor.

James and Elizabeth's daughter Eleanor Ann was born on 15th March, 1821 and sons William and James followed in 1823 and 1826.

The year 1828 proved to be a sad time for Elizabeth. James died on 23rd February and their third son, John who was born a month later, died in June. How did she cope with the death of her husband, possible post-natal depression, the death of her baby and the worry of running a 30 acre farm at Airds on which she employed four men? Some help would have come from a female servant who, no doubt, was employed in the house and moral support would have been given by her family.³

Elizabeth married James Kiernan on 23th February, 1829. A witness to the marriage was Elizabeth's sister Mary. James Kiernan was a medical superintendent on the Aquilar which arrived on 10th February, 1824. Dr. Kiernan would have been considered an excellent catch. This is probably the only marriage by any of John Warby's children to a person unblemished by the convict stain. Such was the social pressure of having emancipist parents, regardless of their status in the community or material wealth. It was not until John Warby's grandchildren began marrying that this pattern was broken.

On the other hand James Kiernan, who was landless and possibly had little income, may have seen material benefits in his marriage to a young widow who owned a farm. On his arrival in the colony, James was appointed surgeon at Wellington Valley with an annual salary of fifty pounds. A disagreement developed between James and Percy Simpson, the commandant at Wellington. James objected to extra duties imposed upon him which appear to have been that of superintendent of stores. He also complained that his professional decisions were over ridden when he exempted sick men from work in the fields and they were ordered out by Simpson. James also mentioned the wretched conditions under which he treated the sick. Their huts were primitive and let in the weather and although milk was available, none was given to sick convicts.⁴ On the other hand Simpson complained that Dr. Kiernan had gone on kangaroo shooting expeditions, thus absenting himself from duty.

Against the orders of his commandant, James returned to Sydney on 28th September where his services were dispensed with. In December 1824 James wrote from Sydney to Sir Thomas Brisbane asking for an appointment as surgeon in some other place. Having not received an appointment by May 1825, James wrote in some desperation to Brisbane explaining that he had consumed the whole of his means and was willing to accept an appointment in his profession or in any other area which the governor thought fit.⁵

A year after their marriage James wrote to Governor Ralph Darling asking for a grant of land for the purpose of clearing it and using it to cultivate crops. In his memorial he stated that he possessed forty-two acres at Airds which he received as gifts with his wife as a marriage portion. He also owned forty head of horned cattle, working bullocks, ploughs, harrows and that he employed two free men and four convicts. James' referee was William Howe, Superintendent of Police who described James as being a respectable character who had lived in the neighbourhood for two years. At this stage James had not bought land or received a grant. It is not known how Elizabeth gained possession of land before their marriage but it can be assumed that some of this land, if not all, had been a gift from her father.

Having obtained an order to select a grant of land, James wrote to Major Mitchell the Surveyor General in May 1831 informing him that he had selected land near Stonequarry Creek. The deed for this land was executed on 30th September, 1841.

In 1833 James wrote to Governor Richard Bourke explaining that the forty acres which he held adjoining the township of Redbank, near Picton, were badly situated for water and he asked for land in the town on which he could build a house which could be licensed for the accommodation of travellers. This request was refused.

James bought 640 acres at Jellore near the source of the Nattai River on October, 1837. He paid 160 pounds for this land.⁶ At this time he employed two convicts at Redbank.⁷

Sometime around 1845, James and Elizabeth joined the steady stream of settlers travelling south to the Albury area. Also moving south at about this time were Elizabeth's sons William and James Layton, her daughter Eleanor, now married to James Keighran, and Elizabeth's brothers Benjamin, Robert and James Warby. They travelled by bullock wagon, camping along the way. Many of these family groups travelled slowly droving their sheep and cattle along the road.

Elizabeth proved to be a capable needlewoman and her work won prizes at bazaars. She hated sewing machines and said that they only made people lazy. As for washing machines, they destroyed the clothes. Elizabeth remained bright and alert right up to her death on 12th July, 1894 at the age of 91. She had become the matriarchal figure of the family in Albury and delighted in entertaining her grandchildren with stories of the olden days when her father accompanied Governor Macquarie in his bush travels and in hunting aborigines who were troublesome in those far off days.⁸ Sadly, Elizabeth outlived her sons William and James.
